2. Types of Background Removal Services

There are two types of background removal services: clipping path and image masking. Clipping path is the most common and simplest form of background removal. Image masking is more complex and is often used for photos with complex backgrounds, like those with hair or fur.

Clipping Path:

Clipping path is the process of manually selecting the object in the foreground and removing the background. This is done using a vector graphics editor, like Adobe Illustrator. The object is selected with a pen tool and a path is drawn around it. The background is then removed, leaving the object on a transparent background.

Image Masking:

Image masking is a more complex process that is often used for photos with complex backgrounds, like those with hair or fur. In image masking, the foreground object is selected with a pen tool and a path is drawn around it. A mask is then applied to the object, which allows the background to be removed while still keeping the object on a transparent background.
