Despite not having to take a test to get a license, applicants need to Sign a document announcing they are able to induce. A license can be bought to get 626 pesos (approximately $28). India

According to the World Health Organisation, India had the next Maximum number of road deaths in the world in 2010, standing in 231, 027. This may be associated with how simple it's to pass your driving test, that is if you opt to carry it. In accordance with a interviewee who looked on BBC Top Gear you do not need to take a driving test in India. Instead it is possible to cover 500 to 1000 rupees into a out of country driving representative and you receive an out of country license that is valid throughout the nation.

But for People Who Want to Really sit the test from India, you Only need to push in a direct line, have a left and cease after 50 yards. It is as straightforward as that.

South Korea

In 2011 South Korea made it a Lot Easier to obtain a driving license By cutting the amount of hours training demanded by 25 to 13. South Korea's driving licencing body KoROAD stated it did so "in the interests of public advantage". Thus South Koreans can currently acquire a license after only 13 hours of tuition along with a payment of 450,000 WON (#277). Conversely, in 2013 China toughened up its principles for a driving licence, meaning candidates need to finish 78 hours of tuition breaking 4000 Chinese Yuan Renminbi (#429). Consequently South Korea has witnessed a massive gain in the amount of Chinese taking driving tests in South Korea -- rising from 7,064 from 2010 to 24,687 in 2013.

According to the Financial Times, Great Chinese motorists can find a South Korean permit in 1 afternoon for Won 67,000 (#41) -- in a fraction of the expense of the Chinese permit -- they convert as soon as they come home. This shows how simple it's to get around the system. Despite making it more difficult to find a permit China has the maximum amount of road traffic fatalities on earth -- 275,983 at 2010.

Honduras

The Honduran test, according to a origin is a mere bagatelle. There's not any practical driving test, just a brief written exam to finish before you're deemed fit to deal with the roads. In 2010 there have been 1,425 street deaths, or nearly 19 deaths per 100,000 inhabitants.

Egypt

The Egyptian driving evaluation , If you might be allowed to call it , is likewise straightforward. Until recently applicants just needed to push six metres ahead and then undo six yards . Lately though the evaluation has been'toughened' up. Now applicants need to answer 8 out of 10 questions right in a computer evaluation, have their own parking abilities assessed and pass on a forward and inverse S-track test. 10,729 individuals died on Egypt's streets in 2010, which is just over 13 deaths per 100,000 inhabitants.

While exploring the world's easiest driving evaluations I came across Some exceptionally unusual and sometimes eyebrow lifting elements in certain states' driving evaluations.

Russia

Require Russia's for instance. The evaluation Carries a slalom between sticks and following this drivers need to accelerate at speed from a standing start and break before a specified mark without leaving skid marks.

Spain

In accordance with driving teacher Oliver Smith, Spain has one of those Most moot components in its own evaluation he has ever encounter:"To examine coordination you maneuver a vehicle on a display, however you steer clear using two levers as opposed to a steering wheel. The vehicle is steered by you moving the levers backward and forward". He proceeds:

"Many people Can't pass the test since this steering system is Totally alien to them. Fortunately or unfortunately, depending upon your perspective, the officer conducting the test simply dismisses the simple fact nobody can perform it and moves virtually everybody".

In some nations it is about dexterity. In Peru for Instance, Candidates have to have the ability to touch their nose with their eyes shut, while people in Taiwan are able to wiggle all 10 hands so as to pass the health part of the test.

In Sierra Leone, Rather than studying the Highway Code, applicants must Purchase and play a board game examining them around the nation's driving laws. And before 2013 candidates carrying the Chinese driving evaluation were counseled "if a head-on collision is inevitable, the motorist should free the steering wheel, then lift the leg and then lie on the chair'. Maybe most bizarrely, in Belize, the Highway Code advises not forcing with a baby in your lap "since the infant could grab your arm and result in an injury".

Driving tests differ enormously from country to country and that I guess we Will not find a place where the driving evaluation is homogenised across Numerous nations or continents. However, There's a clear correlation Between high street traffic deaths and states in which driving evaluations are Easier to maneuver.
